

Life Discussions

[Home | Contents | Search | Post | Reply | Next | Previous | Up]

forthcoming "Coach Carter" is a pro-abortion film Embryos Discussion and Bulletin Board

From: bk_justice@yahoo.com
Remote Name: 213.239.235.227
Date: 01 Dec 2004
Time: 23:25:44 -0000

Comments

Assalamu aleikum.

I have seen an advance copy of the forthcoming film (January 2005) "Coach Carter". Coach Carter is based on the inspirational true life experiences of a coach who enforced academic standards on his basketball team to the point that he actually locked them out of the gym and deliberately forfeited games.

Coach Carter could have been a tale of learning maturity and responsibility, had it stuck to its main objective.

However, apart from too many "girlie" softporn aspects, there is a highly objectionable (and totally irrelevant) subplot running throughout the film in which one of the basketball players gets his girlfriend pregnant, then spends the rest of the film trying to get her to an abortionist. She resists, but at the end they are joyously reunited when she announces "There is no more baby" and they go on to Sacramento State. And the subplot is designed to show the target audience (obviously high school teens) that if she had not flushed her baby down the abortionist's toilet, it would have been "irresponsible" for her to do so!

I don't know what the real-life Coach Carter would think of this, but the film itself leaves him off the hook by the subplot never entering the main part of the film. I checked the web and while there are plenty of references to the forthcoming film, I have found NO mention that it promotes baby-killing.

Sadly, "Coach Carter" is unapologetic pro-abortion propaganda of the very worst Planned Parenthood forthcoming "Coach Carter" is a pro-abortion film

variety and I urge you to protest this film.

Wasalaam.

Last changed: 09/19/06